Abstract. The article deals with the specific features of the investigation of financial cybercrimes. The author notes that currently financial and credit institutions, in the context of the implementation of the program "Digital economy of the Russian Federation", are a kind of "blood vessels" of the country's economy. That is why ensuring the safety of the activities of these institutions should be considered a priority for the relevant state policy and law enforcement agencies. Despite some successes in the field of prevention, disclosure and investigation of cybercrimes committed in the financial and credit sphere, according to experts, the main strategies for ensuring Russia's cybersecurity in the international sphere involve a choice between strategies, one of which is to focus on cooperation with external partners and strengthen the legal framework for global regulation of this area, while the other is to strengthen domestic regulation and focus on its own resources and solutions. There is also a third, most optimal strategy-which consists in readiness to cooperate with external partners and steadily increasing efforts to strengthen the contractual and legal framework for international regulation of the cybersphere, while at the same time it is necessary to strengthen domestic regulation, focusing on domestic resources and innovative solutions that ensure the achievement of Russia's national interests.

A.G. Karayani, Yu.M. Karayani, S.V. Tsygankov,

Abstract. In this article, such a phenomenon as the messenger is considered as a tool of hybrid warfare. The study showed that the materials distributed in the discussion groups of messengers have a high information and psychological potential and are able to form negative attitudes towards the bearers of Russian statehood. At the same time, the most convincing effect is observed in photo and video materials. It seems that this is facilitated by the greater (in comparison with the text) emotional saturation of such materials, their ability to influence the audience's attitudes in an indirect (peripheral) way, i.e. bypassing a thorough assessment of the arguments contained in the communication.
